When a National Horse Show

or army-navy foot-ball game attracts 30,000 people we are amazed and impressed by so large a gathering of men and women.

And such vast assemblages are not of frequent occurrence.

Yet the modern newspaper each day addresses crowds that would fill six Madison Square Gardens or Franklin Fields, and it talks to them day after day, and gets an attentive hearing, too.

When an event such as we mentioned takes place, dozens of merchants scramble and pay a great deal for the privilege of attracting attention to themselves and wares by means of circulars, programmes, posters, signs, toy balloons, and other contrivances, being impressed by the large number of people gathered in one place.

That is because no doubt, the actual presence of the vast crowd forces itself upon them. And yet, through the daily Times-Dispatch, they can appeal to vastly larger crowds and get better attention, because the Times-Dispatch is picked up by the reader, or, to be more correct, many thousands of readers who are looking for news, both general and advertising, and hence the voice of the Times-Dispatch speaks at the right time when the reader is in the mood to listen.
